

Reconnecting Trade Union
and Community Organisations:

Working with the Community
as Trade Unionists

Context

Community work organisations and trade unions are natural allies. Most community organisations share the progressive values of the trade unions - social justice, anti-discriminatory practice, empowerment of people, democratic and accountable organisational processes. Furthermore, most workers are active members of their communities. More workers volunteer time to be active in community organisations than in trade unions. There are also major employers. Yet there has been little cross fertilisation between the sectors to learn from the best practice. Indeed both sectors have unhelpful myths about each other which need to be worked through.

Intended Audience and Course aims

The course is aimed at union members, activists and officers who want to undertake a meaningful community project. It will

- Explore the history and principles of community development, community organising and trade unionism, including undertaking some mutual myth busting.

- Look at community work approaches and identify areas of mutual learning and common cause.
- Introduce the ideas of community mapping, identifying what services, groups and opportunities there are in the local area,
- Work with participants to create joint projects and campaigns and build local alliances.

Course structure

The course will start with an overnighter at Quorn Grange Hotel, from early evening till lunch time the next day, followed by some online support and then a further day the following month. There are no exams or formal assessment although we would like participants to present their learning from the course through the presentation of a real or intended community project / campaign on the follow up day.

The course will be facilitated by Professor Dr Mike Seal and guest speakers. He has worked within community development for 30 years and is a committed trade unionist. He is a consultant, National Officer of the Professional Association of Lecturers in Youth and Community Workers and Visiting Professor at Newman University. He is a Principal Fellow of the Higher Education Academy and a National Teaching Fellow. He co-edited 'Trade Union Education: Transforming the World' and has written or edited 14 other books on community development and education.
